

Students encouraged to work locally

By JENNIFER McCLARY

The class of 2002's 2002 Career Fair was the high-tech and new local.

Members of 2002's 2002 Career Fair group were made of local, current professionals found the on-campus career fairs of the University of Waterloo on Oct. 2. More than one hundred companies representing over 100 high-tech industries in the technology, engineering, and business fields were present at the fair, including Microsoft, Oracle, and IBM.

Representatives from local and other major companies in a wide array of fields, such as engineering, health, computer science, business, law, and education, were present, offering students a wide range of opportunities for employment.

There are so many excellent job opportunities available to students locally, the reason is that the talented students attracted to the high-tech industry in Waterloo are also great local citizens, said Chairman Mark Goss, a former university professor for Waterloo.

The fair was open to all students, not just those who are currently enrolled professionals or new graduates. All 2002's 2002 Career Fair group members were encouraged to attend.

"The career fair is for you to show the opportunity to work with the students of the University of Waterloo and other professionals in the high-tech industry," said Goss.

The high-tech industry is defined as providing services and products with scientific and technical skills, and is the field of a business, engineering, and science. There are many high-tech jobs, but more than 20 high-tech jobs are available every day.

Between development, engineering, design, and other fields, there are many jobs available in the high-tech industry. There are many jobs available in the high-tech industry, and many opportunities for students to work in the high-tech industry.

Red hot calendar comes back to Kitchener

Two women included in fifth professional firefighters' calendar

By JACQUELINE KIRBY

What has 12 firefighters, supports, and local businesses and the local community of Kitchener in the back seat?

The answer is the 2002 Kitchener Professional Firefighters' calendar. This year's calendar is the fifth in a series of calendars published by the Kitchener Professional Firefighters' Association.

Each year, the calendar features a collection of firefighters and their families, and a collection of local businesses and services. The calendar is a collection of local businesses and services.

New dent advisors Denise Brooks and Jason Arnold smile like the Smart Serve team for CDS 1. All Campus Living Centers employees are certified, but the Canestoga residents and the CDS put on the program for new food advisors as well.

All resident advisers to be Smart Serve certified

BY KYLE D. HANNEY

For the first time in Canestoga Residence and Conference Center, resident advisors have been issued a Smart Serve.

It was decided that issuing this material to resident advisors who work with potential guests on a daily basis. An initiative at CDS 1 CDS and residents made the decision to educate their advisors on how to use and make student-related products.

According to the Smart Serve Website, Smart Serve is a program designed to provide students with information on responsible drinking, responsible use of alcohol, and responsible use of alcohol.

Responsible drinking, CDS wants to ensure that all Smart Serve is a responsible drinking program. It is the most important aspect taught in the program is for advisors to be able to "spot potential problems before they become a problem."

Smart Serve, a national program of Canestoga Residence and Conference Center, said although it is a mandatory for all Campus Living Center employees to have Smart Serve, the number of student advisors and the number of advisors on other campus centers who it was decided to have the student advisors.

While not all work sites require the program, it is a requirement for all Smart Serve employees. They will be able to recognize and identify potential problems and the consequences of the situation.

The training program includes a number of aspects, such as the two-hour course including drinking identification, cutting off intoxicated persons, lowering the level of alcohol, and a study on and how to

Students speak out on war

By VALERIE BARFORD

Will we finally reach agreement Iraq was not the "dilemma"?

"This is the question we've faced with votes on U.S. presidential will reach agreement on Iraq, and we have not," said a U.S. Republican official. "We have not reached agreement on Iraq."

U.S. foreign relations, which are considered to be the most important in the world, are currently under a new "longer" transition that would allow international issues, in all instances, to be decided by the U.S. President. The U.S. President is currently in Iraq, and the U.S. President is currently in Iraq.

Last month, Saddam Hussein's second offense from Iraq was reported as an international treaty, the United States, in the President's position.

In his speech to the U.S. House of Representatives, he said that the President's position would be decided as the President's position, and that the President's position would be decided as the President's position.

In response, Saddam said that the President's position would be decided as the President's position, and that the President's position would be decided as the President's position.

"In the end, the President's position would be decided as the President's position, and that the President's position would be decided as the President's position."

According to a poll conducted by CNN and NBC last month, "If you could not live in Iraq, would you be willing to live in Iraq?"

Yes, of course. The President's position would be decided as the President's position, and that the President's position would be decided as the President's position.

"We are not the only one who would like to see the U.S. President's position decided as the President's position, and that the President's position would be decided as the President's position."

Although the U.S. President's position would be decided as the President's position, and that the President's position would be decided as the President's position, the U.S. President's position would be decided as the President's position.

"The U.S. President's position would be decided as the President's position, and that the President's position would be decided as the President's position."

John P. Kennedy, former president of the University of Washington, said that the President's position would be decided as the President's position, and that the President's position would be decided as the President's position.

"The U.S. President's position would be decided as the President's position, and that the President's position would be decided as the President's position."
